FOR RACE AND NATION

APRIL 1989

As Mrs. Thatcher joins the 'Free Mandela' brigade, we say...

SUPPORT WHITE SOUTH AFRICA!

THINGS ARE COMING TO A HEAD for the white people of South Africa, and Britain's Prime Minister is taking a leading role on the side of those aiming to bring them down.

Shortly, Maggie is off to 'Zimbabwe' for a confab with Marxist gangster Robert Mugabe, whom her own political manoeuvrings did so much to instal in power as tin-pot dictator of what had formerly been Rhodesia. Top of the agenda will be discussion of the most expeditious methods of destroying the South African Whites and their country, the last civilised state left on the African Continent.

Partly with an eye to the noisy 'anti-apartheid' lobby in Britain and the votes it might bring her in future elections, Maggie, who is quite happy to hob-nob with a terrorist like Mugabe, is refusing to visit South Africa unless the white authorities there agree to set free Mugabe's fellow terrorist, convicted thug Nelson Mandela. Mrs. T. is also demanding that the South Africans sit down with Mandela's communist ANC (African National Congress) and discuss the surrender of their country to non-white 'majority rule'.

REPEAT OF RHODESIA BETRAYAL?

One idea the Premier might have in mind to try and sell to Mugabe is that of an international conference like the one she set up at Lancaster House in 1979, where Rhodesia was finally killed off. Here the South Africans would be brought face-to-face across the conference table with the ANC in such a way that they could be tricked and browbeaten into signing an agreement with their enemies that would spell their end. This could have been the subject of Mrs. Thatcher's reported recent discussions with the ANC terrorists' chief paymaster and armourer, Soviet party leader Gorbachev.

It would be hard to think, from any of this, that South Africa was a completely independent sovereign state with an absolute right to make any internal arrangements it sees fit for settling the relations of the many racial and tribal groupings living within its territory. Yet here are all these outsiders, now including Britain's Premier, putting vast energy into overturning these arrangements — always, be it noted, to the disadvantage of our white kindred.

This is the outcome of some two generations of violent and venomous hate propaganda against South Africa — one of the longest-running campaigns of its kind against any nation in history.

And yet, it may be asked, what exactly is this supposedly so terrible apartheid system that has occasioned such an international song and dance?

SEPARATE DEVELOPMENT

In fact, apartheid, or separate development, simply means the creation of a separate way of life, including as far as possible the provision of separate areas of territory, for all South Africa's racial and population groups, within a framework of overall white leadership. The good sense of the latter should be obvious when it is remembered that it was the Whites, and exclusively the Whites, whether of Dutch or British stock, who were responsible for raising up South Africa's civilisation from a wilderness over some 350 years of heroic striving, struggle and sacrifice; and it is they alone who can sustain that civilisation that has been built.

Just look at the state of 'independent' Black Africa since the Europeans quit. There is little prosperity (except for the fat-cat politicians living on corruption) and even less law and order. Ethiopia, The Sudan and the rest of Africa's basket cases starve. Uganda, once the jewel of British East Africa, degenerates into AIDS-infected anarchy. And only five years ago Maggie's pal Comrade Mugabe wiped out thousands of his fellow Blacks whom he deemed to be tribal enemies

Going on past form, isn't this what South Africa would become under non-white rule? Is it any surprise that the Whites there have buttressed their position by means of apartheid, with the result that even now South Africa enjoys vastly greater order and progress than any other country in Africa? For instance, Blacks in South Africa (about 24 million) own more motor cars than all the people in Soviet Russia (about 270 million) and certainly more than the rest of Africa put together. So shouldn't we in Britain be supporting South Africa's Whites?

MRS. THATCHER WANTS WHITE SURRENDER

Margaret Thatcher has been trying to sell her moves against South Africa, both to us and to the South Africans themselves, as some sort of road to 'peace'. But the plain and simple truth is that South Africa had much greater internal peace back in the days of Dr. Verwoerd, when her leaders upheld apartheid without compromise and without allowing interference in their sovereign affairs by hostile outsiders. Most of the recent disorder in the country has resulted from the encouragement given to terrorist elements by the weakness of latter-day politicians such as B.J. Vorster and P.W. Botha, who have been prepared to talk as if white leadership and separate development were something 'negotiable'. Many in South Africa feel that their country should return to the old and firmer principles.

But what Mrs. Thatcher wants is not 'peace', 'dialogue', 'settlement' or any of the other sweet-sounding phrases in current use; she wants white surrender, the abandonment by the Europeans in South Africa of their nationhood and their country.

We in the British National Party wholeheartedly sympathise with the South African Whites who refuse to sanction such a surrender. Were we South Africans, we would take exactly the same position.

That is why we say: support White South Africa!

JOLLY GOOD PALS!

Mrs. Thatcher welcomes Robert Mugabe, the 'Zimbabwe' dictator on one of his visits to London. Mugabe has a record of butchery both before and after he took over as boss of what was once Rhodesia

Nelson Mandela: the facts

NELSON MANDELA is a convicted terrorist. Back in the 1960s he was sentenced to life imprisonment for planning to unleash a wave of bombings and killings in South Africa. At the time of his standing trial, he already had a formidable record of thuggery and violence, directed not only against Whites but also many of his fellow Blacks who did not support his terrorist policies. At his trial, internationally recognised as being scrupulously fair and objective, Mandela fully admitted the charges brought against him.

Is Mandela now a reformed character? Do these facts merely relate to his past? Is the Mandela of today ready to renounce terrorism? Not a bit of it! The South African Government (foolishly, in our opinion) has stated that it is willing to let Mandela go free if he will acknowledge that he has abandoned terrorism as a political weapon. He has consistently refused.

At the time of the troubles in South Africa in 1986, some appalling atrocities were committed by the supporters of Mandela's African National Congress against Blacks who would not toe the ANC line, these including the revolting 'necklace' treatment — the fixing of a rubber tyre around the neck of the victim and then setting light to it, burning him slowly to death. Mandela, had he used his position as head of the ANC, could have stopped these atrocities by means of a simple message from his place of confinement; he did not do so.

At about the same time, his wife Winnie Mandela made a speech in which she said to ANC followers: "Together, hand in hand, with our boxes of matches and our necklaces, we shall liberate this country." Many people looked to Mandela to dissociate himself from his wife's inflammatory statement; he did not do so.

So there is no reason to believe that the Nelson Mandela of the 1980s is any different from the Nelson Mandela of the 1960s — in respect of his attitude to terrorism.

This is the man after whom local authorities all over Britain are naming public buildings, streets, squares and parks.

This is the man in celebration of whose birthday a huge 'pop' concert was recently staged at Wembley Stadium, promoted eagerly by the mass media.

And this is the man whom our 'Conservative' Prime Minister now is demanding should be allowed to go free. Mrs. Thatcher, we remind readers, is constantly making pious public declarations about the need to stand firm against terrorists!

These are the facts about Nelson Mandela. And not only do these facts tell us much about the man himself, they also tell us a great deal about our Prime Minister who now wants him released!

TORIES COMING UNSTUCK

IN CASE anyone was wondering what sort of a government Britain has REALLY had over the past 10 years or so, the banana skins that have Mrs. T. and her minions slithering in all directions should give us a clue.

Up till recently the Tories have had a majority at Westminster that has looked unchallengeable. They have kept this through three elections by upholding a brightly coloured plastic facade of 'prosperity'.

By giving the voting infants lollipops to suck, they have been able to stop them from squalling too much about what is wrong in every other area of national affairs. But now, with a new round of inflation threatening as a result of the Government's economic mismanagement, the Chancellor is having to put the squeeze on the lollipop supply.

With high interest and mortgage rates, the voters are starting to feel the pinch where it really hurts — in their pockets. This is likely to make them a lot less forgiving towards the Tories for their other failures.

If nothing else, the Epping Forest and Richmond by-elections certainly show this. In both, what had once been safe Tory territory started to look marginal.

This is what makes Maggie's and her Ministers' current mishandling of the nation's affairs so serious from their point of view. They have spent the last month or so blundering from cock-up to disaster to catastrophe.

First, there has been the great water privatisation soap opera, which still looks set to run and run. It turns out that Environment Minister Nicholas Ridley's plan to flog off Britain's water supply industry, largely to the French, is likely to involve the consumer in thumping great water-rate increases, coming from the cost of the privatisation process itself. This is quite apart from the huge rise in costs to which the industry has been committed anyway by the Government, out of the requirement to upgrade the system to EEC-demanded standards. Privatisation still seems little more than a cynical ploy by the Tories to shift the unpopularity of these charges onto the prospective private owners, thereby freeing themselves of this vote-losing responsibility.

Next came Transport Secretary Paul Channon's performance over the Lockerbie air crash. After some days of apparently shifting and shuffling over the matter, Channon faced his critics in the Commons, where Opposition MPs grilled him over such questions as the bomb warning sent from his department to Heathrow by second-class post in the Christmas rush, where it failed to arrive until weeks after the crash. It was also alleged that Channon had told the press at a private briefing that the culprits had been arrested in Germany. The Germans angrily denied making any such arrest.

Mr. Channon was accused of a cover-up. In fact, up until now, when they are just starting to become visibly unstuck as a result of ineptitude like this, the rule of the Tories has been one big cover-up. Cock-ups like these are only the tip of the iceberg. The Tories' incompetence, and worse, in conducting Britain's government runs much deeper, and stretches into every area of national life. Let us hope that their present bungling will help wake more Britons up to that fact.

ADMISSION OF FAILURE

WITH his latest stingy budget, Chancellor Lawson has had to let out some of the truth about the appalling crisis into which he and the Government have run the British economy. It now seems that British manufacturing capacity has become so contracted in the years of Tory rule that, even if the pound were allowed to fall as against foreign currencies, so as to make British products theoretically more competitive in international markets, there is no way in which industry could expand its production so as to take an increased share of trade.

Britain's manufacturing has been cut to the bone in the last decade by deliberate government policy. What is left of our producing capacity is patchy, extensively foreign-owned and largely dependent on imported components and foreign machinery. Any downward movement in the value of the pound would therefore simply increase companies' costs without any possibility of their raising their production of goods, and they would merely hike up their prices correspondingly.

Mr. Lawson cannot therefore even consider dropping interest rates.

PRODUCT OF INTERNATIONALISM

This sorry state of affairs is the natural outcome of the economic internationalism which the Tories have carried further than any predecessor governments of the old parties at Westminster.

As Nationalists have always predicted that any government of the old-gang parties would do, the Tories spent the early eighties using up Britain's oil wealth to plug the indebtedness on her international trade, which would otherwise have been astronomical, as her home industries were wiped out by imports of foreign manufactured goods which she should have been producing herself. The international system dictated that Britain should pay others to make such goods for her rather than make them in her own factories. Another result of the system was to throw vast numbers of British workers on the scrapheap.

As the oil boom petered out so as to remove this means of paying for foreign goods, the Government turned to selling off Britain's state-owned industries and public assets, largely to foreigners, so as to plug further the trade gap their own policies had done so much to widen. But now there are few assets left to turn into cash, and in any case share prices have taken such a tumble that any returns on such sales are nothing like what they once were.

FINANCING FALSE 'BOOM' WITH EASY CREDIT

With British manufacturing all but wiped out, and Britain dependent on foreigners for her needs, she has now been left in the position where she has much reduced sources of real wealth with which to make her way in the world. To make matters worse, Chancellor Lawson has until recently been allowing imports into Britain to be paid for with easy credit churned out by financial institutions — credit which, because it has been used to buy foreign goods, has not been balanced by any corresponding increase in goods and services within the British economy itself.

Lawson's boss Maggie Thatcher allowed him to do this as a means of sustaining an artificial boom so as to win the 1987 general election.

But now, with Britain's money supply, as a result of all this, growing out of all proportion to her actual production of real wealth, too much money has ended up chasing too little goods and services. This has put us on a new inflationary course. Mr. Lawson has given a figure of 8 per-cent as the current annual rate.

To counter this, Lawson has been

Latest budget confirms Government's disastrous handling of the economy raising interest rates; and, just for a start, mortgage rates have skyrocketed, putting immense pressure on homeowners. The pinch can only become tighter if Britain's economy continues to be run along present lines. As things are, we are threatened with permanent foreign trade deficits abroad and inflationary pressures at home.

Under the regime of economic internationalism, Britain is at the mercy of global economic forces beyond her control. For instance, Lawson has been promising not to raise interest rates any further; but just as he has said this it has been reported that US interest rates are on the way up. If this happens, then there will be further downward pressure on the pound as international speculators sell off Sterling assets and shift vast funds from Britain to the United States, as they are allowed to do without let or hindrance, dumping pounds on the money markets while cleaning out Britain's dollar reserves in the process. To prevent this, Lawson would have to move British interest rates yet higher, putting the screws even harder on industrial investment, consumption and, in the long run, employment in the British economy.

FAILURE OF SYSTEM EXPOSED

The truth is that Thatcher and Lawson, the Tory Party and the whole international system which they support have been exposed as failures — likewise the other parties of Westminster, who are all tied basically to the same system, even if they disagree on some of the details as to how to operate within it. Neither they nor their standard tactic of bribing the electors with the prospect of an easy life offer any kind of way out of the disastrous mess in which they have

VIOLENT CRIME? DON'T WORRY — IT'S ALL IN THE MIND!

PERHAPS you thought there was an explosion of violent crime going on in Britain at the moment. Well, apparently there's no need to worry at all. According to Home Secretary Douglas Hurd, it's all imagination!

Mr. Hurd has just appointed none other than Channel Four TV supremo Michael Grade to persuade us ordinary British yokels that we have been getting our country's law and order problems completely out of proportion. Mr. Grade, whose TV channel is even more noted than its rivals for dishing up porn, violence, drivel and pro-racial-minority hype, is to head a campaign designed to counter, in the Home Secretary's words, "the fear of crime" among ordinary British people, especially women and old folk.

The thrust of this campaign will be to try to persuade people that the streets of our towns and cities are not really as dangerous as is indicated by every piece of evidence and every known fact about them. Thus, when our women and elderly withdraw into their homes at night, as in inner-city ghetto areas, for example, for fear of being assaulted, mugged or raped, they will be solemnly assured by Mr. Grade — with Mr. Hurd's backing — that they are just being neurotic, no doubt implying that they should mend their ways by getting back on the streets again!

PLAYING WITH FIGURES

To support this proposition, the Home Secretary has been publishing statistics purporting to prove that most attacks on the person are by young males against other young males. Women, young or old, do not figure in the statistics to nearly the same extent, says Mr. Hurd.

Presumably, old ladies, when in future they get beaten up in the process of being mugged, can comfort themselves with the thought that it is happening to young males more often than it is happening to them!

Apparently, it does not seem to have occurred to Mr. Hurd that the only reason women and old folk don't crop up in the violent crime statistics on the same scale as young men these days is that, against the background of collapsing law and order, especially in the inner cities over the last decade of Tory rule, they know from bitter experience that walking the streets and housing estates of the areas where they live has become a dangerous occupation. Consequently, they have learnt to barricade themselves in their homes as night draws in and the wild animals go on the prowl.

Since Mrs. Thatcher chose him as Home Secretary, Douglas Hurd hasn't made too convincing a showing in countering violent crime. Latest figures show that violent offences have leapt up in numbers. Maybe Hurd has simply hit on the idea of countering the fear of crime rather than counter crime itself, by trying to con us all with Mr. Grade's media propaganda. It certainly is a softer option than the job of rooting out the violent criminals and putting them behind bars for a long time!

There is certainly little evidence that Hurd and his colleagues have the will to deal with violent crime as it needs to be dealt with. On the other hand, there is no

LAWSON
Unable to stop soaring inflation landed us.

It is time for Britain to be liberated from the international system altogether. Her industries must be rebuilt behind trade barriers that exclude all imports of goods that she is capable of producing for herself. Government must make itself the master of finance. British investment must be directed into the home economy and not permitted to flow abroad. The feeding of money into the economy must be adjusted so as to match real home production, to bring about stable prices and to guarantee full employment.

And a strong nationalist state is above all required to guide the British Nation away from the greedy materialism encouraged by all the politicians of the present system. Individual selfishness must be subordinated to the national welfare. This is the only programme that will bring about real national recovery.

THE GRIM REALITY
This old lady has to maintain a metal grill on her windows to protect herself against violent thugs. This is a typical scene in present-day Britain doubt that they do want to keep the voters happy in the run-up to the next election. Hence this Orwellian attempt to persuade the electorate that the monstrous facts of life in front of their very eyes do not really exist!

CONTEMPT FOR THE PEOPLE

Hurd's media campaign certainly shows one thing if nothing else: the boundless contempt the politicians have for ordinary British people. Apparently they think they can endlessly keep the voting herds delivering 'x's' for them on ballot papers by backing up their empty and meaningless promises with phony media images, whilst never delivering the real goods.

If you were still in any doubt that our present rulers are morally and politically bankrupt, you need look no further than Hurd's media crime spoof. In fact it is an insult to the intelligence of the British public.

EUROPE

MRS T. SET TO DO BIG ABOUT-TURN

As EEC elections loom up, premier drops former 'nationalist' postures

THIS PAPER has always believed Mrs. Thatcher to be an 18-carat political phony.

Phony in her declarations about preventing Britain being 'swamped' by immigrants. Phony in her calls for a firmer line on 'law and order'. Phony in her stance as 'champion' of British interests and independence against the Common Market bureaucrats.

Phony in her whole posture as a British 'patriot'.

Evidence of this stands out in the latest report of Tory plans to campaign for the Common Market elections in June. Although a large portion of the British public is disinterested in the EEC elections for reason of having little sympathy with the European Community, that portion which does bother to vote in the European elections tends to comprise the keenest pro-Market. Tory Central Office has recently done some sounding out of grass-roots opinion and is very worried that the people who vote for Euro-candidates are not so eager to vote Conservative because they dislike what they believe to be Mrs. Thatcher's 'lukewarm' enthusiasm for the Market, as seen in some of the declarations she has made in the past against European super-government and other schemes for very close European integration.

So, according to a report in The Sunday Express on March 19th, Mrs. Thatcher is now changing her tune — not for the first time of course. According to the report:-

"The Tory manifesto for the European elections in June will be the launch-pad for the Prime Minister's boldest move yet in dealing with Brussels.

"The manifesto will drop most, if not all, of the nationalistic reservations about the way the Community is developing.

"Instead, it will be dramatically upbeat, emphasising Britain's key role in a Europe which is bound to co-operate ever more closely.

"The manifesto will emphatically not commit Britain to a United States of Europe, or anything like it.

"But neither will the door be closed against such a possibility in future. The option will be left open." (our emphasis).

The report went on to say that "Mrs. Thatcher will give her full backing to a determinedly pro-Europe line."

"Key factors lie behind what will be seen as a big change of heart by Mrs. Thatcher, whose speech in Bruges last September was attacked by the European Commission as being 'unrelentingly negative.'

"A number of private polls taken by Tory Central Office show that the party is facing heavy defeat at the European elections on June 15th. Many traditional Tory voters plan to stay away from the polls because they believe Mrs. Thatcher wants nothing to do with Europe."

So, once again, the Prime Minister, who has described herself proudly as a lady 'not for turning', has done a spectacular U-turn. From being an apparent opponent of close European integration, she has now become an ardent European. Note where the report says that the Tory manifesto will not commit Britain to a support of a United States of Europe but at the same time will not commit us not to support such a development in the future. This, in other words, enables Mrs. Thatcher to face both ways at once, keeping some of the votes of those who are not keen on European political union but catching many of those who are — by the hint that Britain may still move in that direction when public opinion in this country has been a little more

Her oft-repeated pose as a 'patriot', standing up firmly for British interests, has always been a hollow fraud

'softened up' on the subject.

British Nationalist, and the BNP, have never trusted Margaret Thatcher on the question of the Common Market, any more than we have trusted her on the numerous other issues on which she has struck populist poses. This latest report shows that the Prime Minister is what she has always been: a professional politician prepared to adapt her course to the currently prevailing wind — and to lie to the people whenever it seems expedient to do so.

The AIDS plague CUBA SHOWS THE WAY

OUR PAPER has never had any sympathy with the politics of Cuba's Communist boss Fidel Castro.

But Comrade Castro seems now to have adopted a policy which we can heartily approve. He is dealing with the problem of the AIDS disease by setting up a special colony for AIDS sufferers in a village somewhere south of Havana, where contact with the outside world is totally banned.

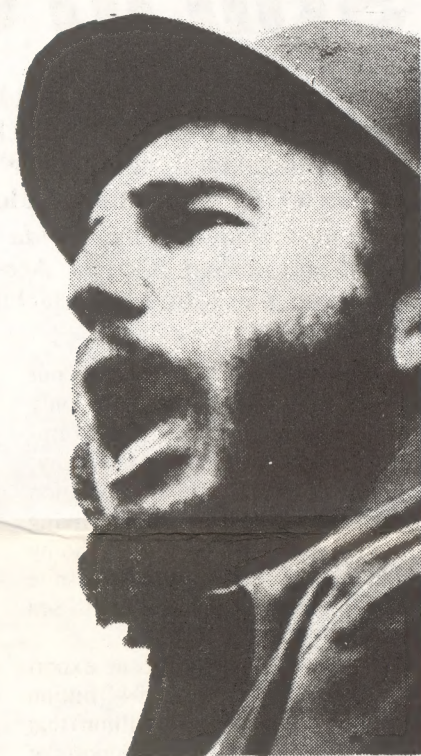

A French journalist who tried to visit the area reported that it was heavily guarded by troops, with no-one allowed either in or out.

The Cuban leader — whatever our other differences with him — is in this case showing a sensible and realistic attitude, for this is exactly what should be done with AIDS sufferers in Britain.

What happens to homosexuals who contract AIDS we do not very much care.

Nor do we care very much what happens to heterosexual people who invite upon themselves the possibility of catching AIDS by adopting a promiscuous lifestyle and 'sleeping around' with anybody and everybody who takes their momentary fancy, male or female.

Also, needless to say, we have no sympathy with junkies who catch AIDS by using contaminated needles. They deserve all they get.

CASTRO
Communist or not, he is right in his approach to the AIDS problem

But there is a tiny proportion of people who catch AIDS with whom we have every sympathy and who should be protected from the disease. This consists of those who unknowingly marry AIDS carriers and pick up the infection that way. They must be protected, few though they may be in number. We must also protect those unborn children who may be the offspring of such alliances. According to the report from Cuba, Castro's policy is to allow AIDS victims in the colony to have sexual intercourse but not to bear children. This is exactly right.

It is an interesting thing about Communists like Castro: they do all they can to encourage sloppy 'liberal' attitudes in the countries of the non-communist world. But on their own patches they are not always so stupid. When confronted with things like AIDS and homosexuality, they sometimes adopt a much saner line than we do.

The BNP has in fact advocated for Britain a similar policy of the forced quarantining of AIDS patients. It is interesting that Castro is now doing the same thing. This country would do well to follow his example.

British as they come — but denied passport

MRS. DOROTHY MALTMAN (pictured on the left here) is British to the core. She is 62 and has lived in Derby since 1940. But she has been having a hassle with the immigration authorities over the matter of getting a renewal of her passport.

Her two sisters, pictured with her, were, like her, born overseas when their father was serving with the Army, in Mrs. Maltman's case in Karachi, now part of Pakistan. The trouble is that the father was himself also born in what is now a 'foreign' country, in the Curragh barracks, now situated in the Irish Republic!

Mrs. Maltman and her sisters therefore fall into the category of British subjects without citizenship.

Until a short time ago, Mrs. Maltman had no trouble in getting a passport, but when the new nationality law came into force she was made ineligible for one, due to her and her father's country of birth.

Mrs. Maltman is taking her case to the courts, and what will be the outcome of the case is not known to us.

But we consider it an absolute SCANDAL that she should ever have to do this. Our nationality laws should be based, not on where a person was born, but on whether or not they are ETHNICALLY BRITISH.

But of course we know that the present Government would never adopt such a commonsense policy. After all, that would be 'racist', wouldn't it?

KEEP OUR ART TREASURES IN BRITAIN!

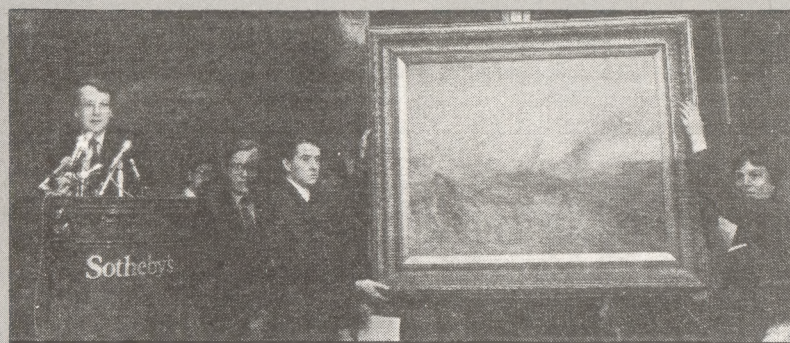

BRITAIN'S HERITAGE of great art is one of the chief victims of the 'free market' ideology of the Tory Government. Huge quantities of outstanding art treasures are now leaving the country because foreigners have bid the highest prices for them in art auctions, and the Government will take no steps to ensure that they stay in Britain because this would run contrary to its doctrine of the free movement of goods and capital.

One of the treasures likely to leave the country soon is Turner's 'Seascape, Folkestone', a masterpiece for which a Japanese bidder recently offered £20 million. No rival bid was made from a British source.

Italy and France, with more art treasures than we have, simply do not allow their great masterpieces to leave their countries in this way. Britain, however — or at least Thatcher's Britain — seems more interested in profit-and-loss than in preserving great cultural works. The Turner picture, it appears, is likely to go to Japan — a good swap, the Government probably thinks, for a few tens of thousands of Datsuns and Toyotas!

Turner's 'Seascape, Folkestone', likely to go abroad in 'free market' deal

LET'S GET RID OF THESE BARMY JUDGES!

JUDGE PICKLES (pictured on left) is one of a great many very soft and stupid judges sitting in the courts of this country.

Recently this judge sent to jail for four days a young woman who was too frightened to testify in a charge of rape against her ex-boyfriend.

The same judge, a short time previously, had let another rapist walk free after taking pity on him in consequence of a sob-story about his background.

Judges like this should be chucked off the benches, and sensible judges, who will punish criminals properly, put in their place.

No, the staff of our paper did not emulate them. We are all in favour of good charities, but 'Comic Relief' was not one of them. A large part of the money raised by this campaign went to the Third World. We believe that charity begins at home and that the money we have to spare for it should go to help needy people in Britain. So that's why we were not to be found among the red-nose wearers last month. We believe just in helping our own.

NO, WE DIDN'T WEAR RED NOSES!

The Channel Tunnel: a vast white elephant?

THE LATEST ESTIMATE of the cost of the high-speed rail link required for the Channel Tunnel is that the project will run to at least £1.7 billion.

This costing was arrived at after British Rail opted, in order to minimise environmental damage, to put a third of the 68-mile route through tunnels and another third through noise-reducing cuttings. This is reckoned to knock up the price of a London-Folkestone return ticket from the present £10.40 to a ridiculous £37.50!

Add all this to the cost of building the Channel Tunnel itself, a figure over which there seems not yet to be any certainty but which is bound to be astronomical, and the mind boggles at the thought of the cost to the users of the Channel when it is built — if the project is ever going to pay for itself.

And this is quite apart from the appalling environmental damage that is going to be done to large parts of Kent and SE London, even with the modifications mentioned.

We suspect that, in fact, the cost of getting to the Continent through the Channel will be considerably greater than the present cost of travelling by the existing ferry.

It all leads to the question: why is the Channel Tunnel being built at all?

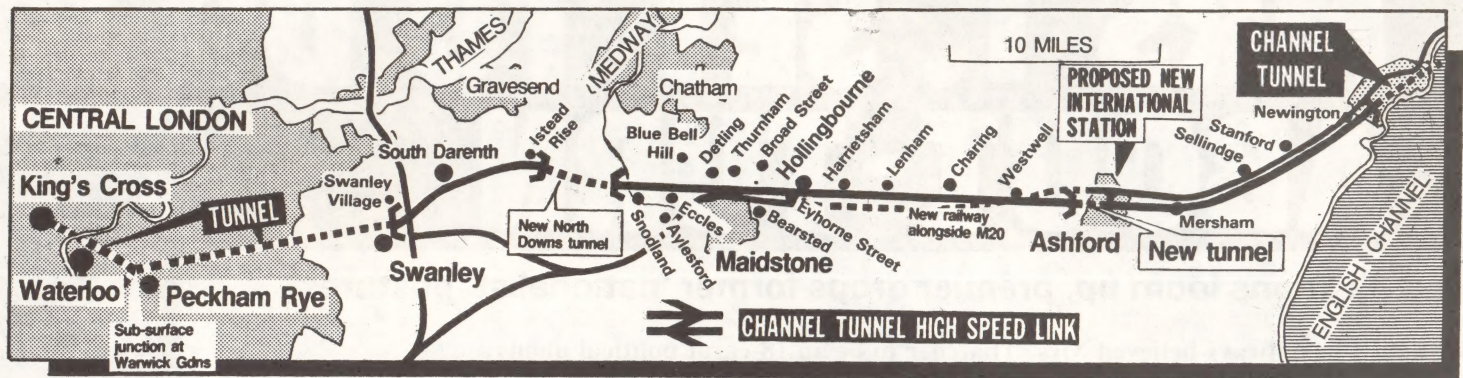

We have always believed that the Government has decided on the building of the Tunnel, not for any sound economic reasons, but essentially for political ones.

The Euro-fanatics who dominate the Tory Party and the other parties are desperate to create a symbol of Britain's ties with the Continent of Europe. They see the Channel, in other words, as a PSYCHOLOGICAL weapon in the campaign to induce the British people to love the Common Market. "See, we are no longer an island!" That is what they want to be able to say to everyone. They want to claim that we are part of Europe physically as well as economically and politically.

That, we believe, is what the Channel Tunnel is all about: it is a huge white elephant that makes no economic sense but is intended purely as a political stunt. The project should be scrapped forthwith.

The proposed route for the Channel Tunnel high-speed rail link, now running up astronomical costs

ON THE INDUSTRIAL FRONT

British industry still in decline

CITY COLUMNIST SPELLS IT OUT

BRITISH INDUSTRY is still in a state of decline, despite all the government propaganda which claims that we are enjoying some kind of industrial 'resurgence'. That is the truth recently spelled out by a City columnist in a loyal Tory newspaper.

In his column in the Sunday Telegraph, called 'Current Account', on the 12th March, John Murray said:-

"To establish the degree of our incompetence, we need only compare our industrial performance with that of West Germany, which, with a similar population and a 50-per-cent higher living standard, has left us standing during the past 40 years, despite our windfall benefit of North Sea oil.

"It is their magnificent export performance of $294 billion (ours is a pitiful $131 billion) that enables them to enjoy imports of $227 billion and still produce a favourable trade balance of $70 billion, whilst our relatively meagre imports of $154 billion produce the greatest adverse trade balance in our history, which is appalling and growing. "The problem is long-standing, the decline inexorable, the complacency frightening. The purchasing power of the pound is now just over 4 per-cent of what it was in 1939; it has more than halved during the past decade. Successive governments have debased the currency, a fatal error in any economy, to give a false impression of success."

The writer went on to give some comparisons between British and German output: for instance, the West Germans produced 36 million tonnes of crude steel in 1987 as against Britain's 17 million tonnes; 416 million kwh. of electricity as against Britain's 298.5 million, 982 million tonnes of man-made fibres as against our 267 million, 4,340,000 passenger motor vehicles as against our 1,143,000.

This was the position of things 8½ years after Mrs. Thatcher came to power in 1979. Of particular interest were the figures for inflation, which established, as stated, that money has halved its value during the time of Thatcher government — despite the claim of the Tories that they have waged a successful war against inflation.

The Sunday Telegraph is, as is well known, a paper that supports the Government. That such a damning indictment of Britain's industrial performance over recent years could appear in a paper like this is some indication of just how bad the state of British industry really is.

For a long time, our own paper has insisted that the Government's claims of industrial recovery amount to nothing more than a big 'con' of the British public. It is reassuring to hear one of the staunchest pro-government papers acknowledge the same thing.

More Jap ownership of British industry on the way

THE JAPANESE already own far too much of British industry. But it appears that the Government is perfectly happy for them to own a good deal more.

Toyota, it is reported, is hoping to build an £800 million plant somewhere in Europe, and Britain is said to be the favourite location.

The news of this and other impending Jap investments in Britain, was given in Autocar & Motor for February 8th. According to the article in that magazine dealing with the Jap plans, "the Japanese car-manufacturers have targeted the UK as the best site for a European production base." The article went on to say that "Mrs. Thatcher and Lord Young have welcomed Toyota's plans. However, other EEC countries see the UK as the treacherous Trojan Horse of Europe, allowing the Japanese manufacturers back-door access to markets such as France and Italy, which restrict Japanese products."

We do not often agree with the EEC, but in this case we endorse thoroughly the attitude of the countries which oppose the setting up of Jap factories here. We do not, like Mrs. Thatcher and her Ministers, regard the decision of the Japs to build factories in Britain as a boon to the British economy at all. On the contrary, we regard it as a disgrace that the Government is prepared to see increasing slices of industry in this country come under foreign ownership, whether Japanese or otherwise.

Quite apart from the question of national independence and pride, it is not economic common sense to have foreign ownership of our own country's industry. The profits from these foreign-owned factories will largely go out of Britain. The decisions affecting the workforce will be made, not in Britain, but overseas. This has had appalling effects in the past, with the decisions of the foreign-owned multi-nationals to close down their British branches costing thousands of British workers their jobs.

There is nothing wrong with Britain trying to adopt Japanese standards of efficiency and productivity in her factories; but this can be done by studying how the Japanese work and organise their production and then applying the lessons over here. Nissan in Sunderland is often cited as an example of how British motor-manufacturing can be improved by bringing in the Japs. But everything that has been achieved by the Sunderland factory could have been achieved by the import of Japanese methods, but without Japanese ownership and control.

Recently veterans of the Far Eastern war of 1941-45 protested against the Duke of Edinburgh attending Emperor Hirohito's funeral in Japan. Indeed we might ask: what the hell did so many of our servicemen in the Far East die and suffer imprisonment for — if the result is to be to hand over large slices of British property, assets and resources to the very people we were supposed to have defeated in World War II?

JAPS TARGET BRITAIN

This map shows areas lined up by the Japanese for business conquest, with the blessing of the Government. Eventually Japs and other foreign firms could own the entire British motor industry

ARMY READY TO DITCH LAND ROVER

THE ARMY could soon be driving Japanese or German cross-country vehicles after a decision by the Ministry of Defence to invite tenders from abroad to find a replacement for the 35-year-old Land Rover.

This was what was reported by Simon O'Dwyer-Russell, Defence Correspondent of The Sunday Times, last month. The news, if true, is appalling. According to Land Rover officials, the decision by the MoD to buy foreign vehicles could have a "quite catastrophic effect on our sales of military vehicles abroad."

Land Rover is not one of the 'lame factories. It is essential to keep Land Rover in business making military vehicles for Britain, and other countries — for strategic reasons even more than for economic ones.

In fact, if Land Rover and the rest of the British motor industry operated behind protective walls, as Japanese industries do, they would be able to increase massively their volume of production and therefore be cheaper to buy, not only to our own forces but others as well. But the Government is totally against the adoption of any such policy.

We say that the forces must be

LAND ROVERS

If the forces change over to foreign vehicles, it could be the beginning of the end for this great British institution ducks' of the British motor industry. For the past 40 years, its products have had an excellent reputation for performance and value-for-money all around the world, and more than 40 armies at present have them in service. Japanese producers of similar vehicles, however, may well be able to undercut Land Rover in tendering to the British forces because of their huge volume of production. This volume of production is largely due to the fact that the Japs operate behind the wall of a protected home market, whereas in Britain Land Rover has to compete with other cross-country vehicles from abroad, including, notably, Japanese ones.

If Land Rover lose a large volume of sales to foreign armed forces as a result of the British forces not choosing to buy its vehicles, it could be the beginning of the end for a highly successful British motor vehicle.

The decision to go shopping abroad is of course that of the Government. Once again, this Government shows that it is not prepared to give its full backing to British industry — even when the industry in question is a relatively efficient and successful one. There is far more than mere economics involved here. No nation can have an effective defence capacity if this does not include the capacity to produce its weapons of defence in its own stopped from going abroad for their purchase of cross-country military vehicles and must be made to buy Land Rovers, as in the past. We further say that the whole of the British market for motor vehicles should be supplied by British factories, under British ownership and employing British labour. It makes sense from the standpoint of improving industrial production. It makes sense from the standpoint of creating employment. It makes sense from the standpoint of our balance of payments. And it makes sound military sense as well.

YOUR LETTERS

Sir, — Mr. Peacock's letter last month about the benefits of introducing an identity card system, to stop illegal immigrants, is absolutely right. According to the Daily Telegraph of July 22nd 1987, Judge M. Argyle said in a speech at Trent Polytechnic in Nottingham that there were more than 5 million illegal immigrants in this country. An ID card system would help wrinkle these out.

G. JONES

Wolverhampton, W. Midlands

Sir, — According to the Daily Mail (March 27th), "Britain's two million Moslem voters" have threatened to withdraw their votes from MPs who will not support a ban on the Rushdie book. Two million? Add to this the non-Moslem Asians, the Moslems too young to vote and then the West Indians — how many coloureds is that?

BNP foils reds to hold East London rally

LEFT-WING MILITANTS, no doubt extremely worried about the increasing impact of the British National Party in East London, made a determined attempt to stop the BNP rally planned for the area on February 27th. In the event, they failed miserably and the rally was a huge success.

Those coming to the rally had been advised to rendezvous outside West Ham Underground Station for redirection to the meeting place. A red mob of about 200 gathered at this rendezvous point with the object of attacking and intimidating those arriving there for the rally. This the reds were just about brave enough to do, as the people concerned were then in small parties of twos and threes. Police present, however, stopped any trouble. But the police made it difficult for the BNP by insisting that those going to the rally get back on the train and proceed to the next station along the line. This caused all sorts of problems for the BNP personnel responsible for meeting the people and directing them to the rally location, in some cases transporting them there.

This job was magnificently done, however, by Richard Edmonds and a team of helpers, and eventually nearly all those coming to the meeting did get there — although the meeting began over an hour late.

A crowd of well over 100 heard party leader John Tyndall speak, with David Bruce appealing for the collection and Eddy Butler, the local Organiser, in the chair.

Eventually, an advance party of reds did find the meeting place. One of them took a quick look inside, saw the large crowd (including many of the BNP's toughest stewards and bodyguards) and they thought better of trying to intervene.

EAST LONDON MEETING: John Tyndall speaks

AT LONG LAST, after many years' wait, we can announce the opening of the promised BNP building! The building will be known as the BNP Bookshop and will be situated at the following address:-

154 Upper Wickham Lane
Welling
Kent DA16 3DP
(Tel. No. 01 316 4721)

The party will, however, continue to use a post office box number for its official mailing address, which will be:-

PO Box 117
Welling
Kent DA16 3DW

It will be noticed that there is a difference of only one letter between the bookshop address and the mailing address.

The bookshop will, to begin with, be open on four days a week, as follows:-

Tuesdays to Fridays
10 a.m. to 5.30 p.m.

Outside these hours, enquiries and messages can be left with the telephone answering service.

It is our aim that the building will eventually be open on six days a week. At the moment, however, opening days have to be restricted in accordance with personnel available. Apart from having a regular officer present on the premises to deal with normal business, it is necessary to have extra manpower present to ensure security of personnel, premises and contents.

Welling, although in the Kent postal area, is in fact part of Greater London. It can easily be reached by public or private transport. Those using the former method should travel by British Rail Southern Region to Welling from either Charing Cross, London Bridge or Waterloo East. 154 Upper Wickham Lane is a very short walk from Welling Station.

For those using their own transport when coming from Central London, follow the signs pointing towards the A2 to Dover. At Kidbrooke turn onto the A207, which will lead straight to Welling. Coming from other directions, the best route is by the M25 eastbound section. Leave the M25 where it crosses the A2. Take the A2 towards London, and turn off to Welling about 5 miles along. Follow the signs to Welling under the A2 and up Danson Road to Park View Road. Turn left at Park View Road and Upper Wickham Lane is about a ¼-mile along on the right.

BNP Two-stage development plan

RECENTLY, we of the staff of British Nationalist have had our ears close to ground of grass-roots opinion on ways and means to improve our paper. Suggestions made tend to tally with our own estimates as to where we have been failing to realise our full potential as a voice of the nationalist cause. The main faults suggested have been these:-

- (1) Articles are too few, too long and, at times, too 'highbrow' for the market at which the paper is aimed.
- (2) There is too little illustration — not enough photos and hardly any drawings or cartoons.
- (3) The paper bears too exclusively the stamp of its two main writers. A greater variety of styles and approaches is needed.
- (4) Excessive space is occupied by advertisements to the exclusion of political content.
- (5) There are not enough internal news items — reports as to what is going on around the branches of the BNP.

We think these criticisms justified, and we are now embarking on a two-stage improvement plan, bringing more people into the production team and easing the other work schedules of those already engaged on the paper.

The first stage of the improvement programme begins this month. We are devoting only one page to advertisements, and the page saved is being given up to extending the range of political articles.

In the second stage, we intend to expand the number of pages to eight, with two given to advertisements, as previously, and one further page to political articles.

At the same time, we are endeavouring more than in the past to make items shorter and more numerous, and with increased illustration.

We hope that readers will like our efforts to improve the paper. We hope at the same time that they will appreciate the difficulties that have prevented us doing better in the past.

NEW BUILDING FUND: £3,885.10 NEEDED!

Contributions over the past month to the BNP New Building Fund have totalled £272.90. This is not bad, although we could do a lot better. Let us try this coming month to break all records. A lot of money still must be raised to equip our building properly.

Please send all contributions to New Building Fund, PO Box 117, Welling, Kent DA16 3DW. Please give generously!

NATIONALIST CAMP: On the weekend of May 13th-14th there will be a Nationalist Spring Camp in the Midlands area. It will be open to all British Nationalists. For details, contact: East Midlands BNP, PO Box 148, Leicester LE3 2YD.

What We Stand For

- The return of leadership and statesmanship to British affairs
- A government that will put British interests first
- British withdrawal from the European Common Market
- Closer links with the White Commonwealth
- Protection of British industry by the selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from Britain
- A sane financial system that will give to the people the purchasing power to buy the goods they produce
- The revival of British farming
- British ownership and control of British industry and resources
- A clamp-down on social security spongers and the restoration of the incentive to work — with the proviso that work is locally available
- An end to immigration and a start to repatriation
- British support for the Whites in South Africa
- An end to financial aid to corrupt Third World regimes
- The strengthening of Britain's defences
- Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty
- The smashing of the IRA, the termination of the Anglo-Irish Agreement and firm support for the Loyalist majority in Northern Ireland
- Repealing of the laws permitting Abortion and Homosexuality and a general toughening of legislation against the promotion of obscenity in the media
- The elimination of communism in Britain, in the mass media, in the factory and in the schoolroom

SPREADING THE WORD

Facts and views the media try to suppress

BRITAIN TODAY is like a country under enemy occupation. News and opinions that are considered 'dangerous' to the occupying power are rigorously suppressed by the established communications media: the press, broadcasting and the motion picture and publishing industries. A particularly important example of this is the organised black-out of the voice of white native British protest against alien immigration and the multi-racial society that our political masters have planned for us. Another matter for suppression is public discussion of the power and influence wielded in our society by persons and pressure groups of alien origin not owing first loyalty to the British nation. Free debate over these matters is carefully excluded from TV, radio and the columns of the newspapers.

In addition to these 'gags' by the media, laws have been passed through parliament whose purpose has been to silence ordinary British people who wish to speak out on such subjects as these we have mentioned. These laws have been presented as measures to combat 'race hate'; in reality they are laws aimed at silencing patriotic Britons in their resistance to the alien take-over of their country.

Nevertheless, resistance to the take-over is growing, and those leading that resistance refuse to be silenced. The British National Party, which is gradually becoming the main force of patriotic resistance in Britain, is building its own communications network for reaching, informing and rallying the British people. Available through this network are books, periodicals, leaflets, posters, stickers and tape recordings all of which convey vital information now being hidden from the people by the big battalions of the mass media. In this broadsheet we are advertising the items that are available. Do your bit for Britain by obtaining them and helping spread the message to others!

WHAT'S HAPPENED TO FREE SPEECH?

Britain is supposed to be a democracy, yet the government prosecutes people who speak out in protest against immigration and the multi-racial society it is planning for us.
